

Colman Dock ferry access changes started June 27

Washington State Ferries (WSF) implemented new vehicle access lanes at Seattle's Colman Dock on June 27. This change is to prepare for construction to replace the aging and seismically-vulnerable terminal. These new vehicle access lanes will be in place for approximately one year. Stay tuned for more information on additional changes to Colman Dock access as construction ramps up later this summer.

What is changing

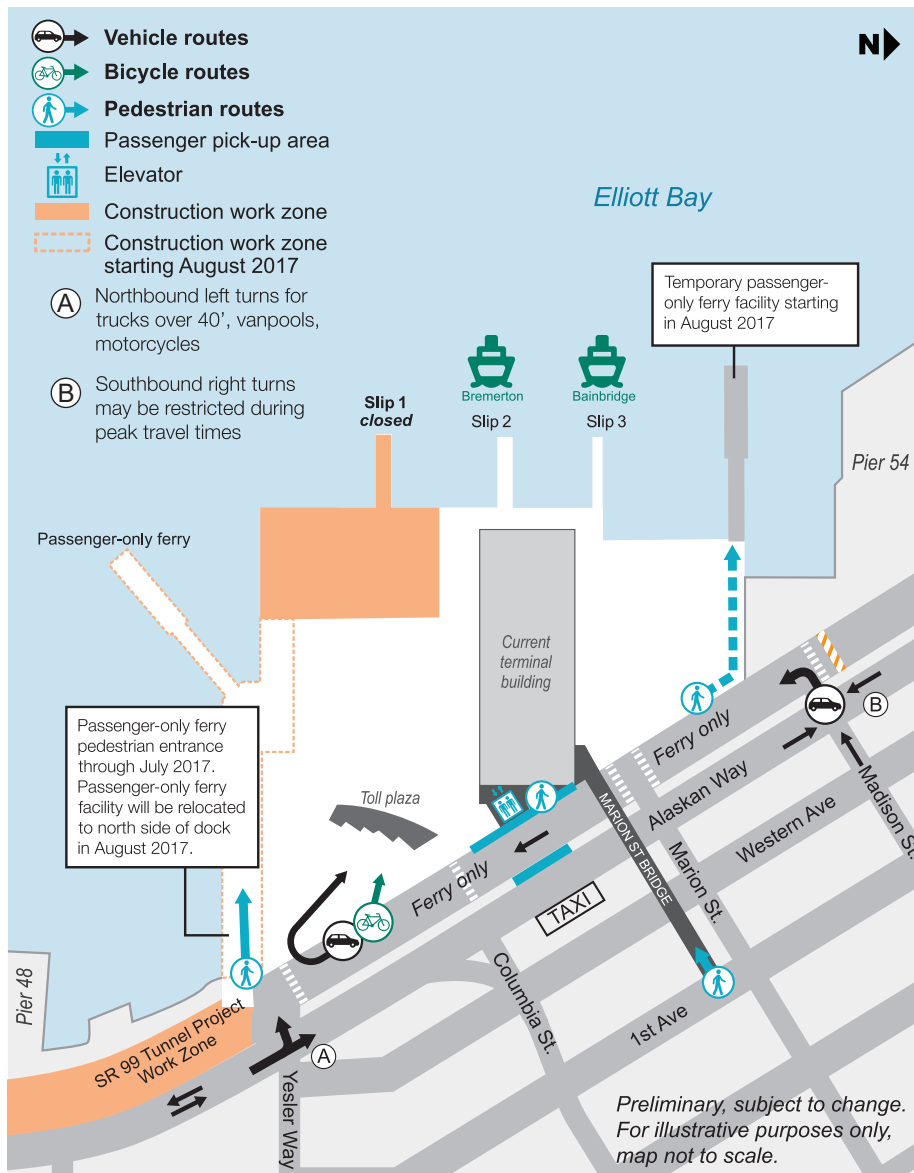

- The area in front of Colman Dock between Madison Street and Yesler Way are now vehicle lanes for ferry access and queuing
- Most drivers enter Colman Dock from northbound Alaskan Way under the viaduct or via westbound Madison Street
- The northbound left lane under the viaduct is marked for ferry access only
- Right turns into the queuing area from southbound Alaskan Way at Madison Street may be restricted during peak travel times
- Trucks over 40 feet must enter Colman Dock from northbound Alaskan Way at Yesler Way
- Vanpools and motorcycles can also enter Colman Dock from northbound Alaskan Way at Yesler Way
- Pick-up and drop-off spaces are available on the west side of Alaskan Way under the viaduct between Marion and Columbia streets
- Uniformed police officers and WSF staff will direct traffic during peak travel times

What is not changing

- People walking and riding bicycles enter Colman Dock in the same way
- Passenger-only ferry access will not change until August
- Driver exits from Colman Dock remain at Yesler Way or Marion Street
